

Please do not weaken Indiana's telephone privacy law by imposing the federal "established business relationship" exemption on Indiana consumers. The Indiana law has been a wonderful success, taking me from several calls each week to zero. I do not want ANY telemarketing calls. They are an intrusion on my privacy which I find exponentially more offensive than seeing a bare breast on TV. I may have an established business relationship with a bank to meet one financial need, however this does not mean that I have any interest in other products or services from that bank. In some cases, the business relationship with a particular bank was not even my choice in the first place as in bank mergers or the selling of my mortgage. You are charged with the responsibility of protecting my privacy from unwanted intrusions, please take that responsibility seriously and refrain from forcing any changes to the Indiana law.
